LONDON, June 9.-The Judge finished his charge in the baccarat case at 5.20 P. M. After being absent nine minutes, the tury returned to the court-room with a verdict for the five defendants.

On its being announced, the speciators set up a chorus of blases, which were sternly repressed ers Gilroy and Barker and Gen. Pitzgerald. by the Judge.

Previously to this outbreak the most sensational occurrence of the many had taken place when the Lord Chief Justice had taken his seat and the court was declared open.

Gen. Owen Wittiams then stepped forward in an excited manner and began at easting. Gen. Williams-I wish, my Lord, to make Sir Edward Clarke (springing to his feet)-

Gen. Williams My Lord, I was secused yesterday of an abominable crime; I wish to say that the accusation is untrue. Lord Coleradge-Please sit down.

This ended the incident, the General having succeeded in getting his indignant denial be-fore the jury in spite of the protests of counsel and the supposed unbending rules of the court.

Lord Coleridge then began this charge, the first portion being entirely impartial, and confined to a statement of the admitted facts. His Lordship then went on to say that it was worthy of consideration that the plaintiff had worthy of consideration that the plaintiff had placed his counters on the white paper before him, as had he placed them on the cloth, like the others, he would have been less easily detected.

THE PRINCE'S CHIPS NOT IN COURT. It was divulged yesterday that the chips produced in court, and alleged to be those used at Tranby Croft were not those actually used by the players.

The latter bore the Prince of Wales's plame of three ostrich featners on the reverse side, but in order to preserve the secret that they were the property of His Royal Highness a second set was made identical in every respect with the others, except that the crest was omitted.

The Story of the Case.

The Wilsons little knew what a stir their house party at Tranby Croft during the Doncaster race week in the beginning of last September was destined to create. They probably wish now that the will of the head of the house had prevalled and baccarat had been omitted, even when the Prince proposed it.

The Wilsons are very rich, new people whom the Prince of Wales for reasons of his own saw fit to take up. The list for the nonse party at their handsome country place near Donesater, the now famous Trapby Croft, was duly submitted to His Royal Highness, who The Prince had a horse in the Doncaster races, and when this animal bore the Prince's colors under the wire first, it can be imagined made away with by all the dinera.

It was a brilliant party, all the Prince's friends being swells, and the rich Wilsons pleted at Chatham at a cost of £600,000, coming in for some show as the hosts of H's is being rapidly pushed.

Royal Highness, the party may be considered a very sristocratic one. Lord Coventry, Gen. Owen Williams, Lord Edward Somerset, Mr. Lycett Green, a son-th law of the Wilsons, and Str William Gordon Cumming, an exceedingly swagger guardsman and crony of the Prince, besides ladies of the party, were in the baccarat games. The first evening, the 8th of September, passed off smoothly, and so apparently did the next, although the Prince remarked during the course of the play that he wished players would put their stakes where they could be seen.

"stanner" which the Prince, who was banker, did not notice was due to him. The next day Coventry and Gen. William came to Gordon-Cumming and told him he was charged with cheering at cards the provious evening. Young Arthur Wilson had observed him putting up more counters when he won and autirscting from them when he lost. He had told his motner, and the guardeman was watched by five of them the next time and hey all say they saw the same course of play on Gordon-Cumming's part. He denied it, but eventually signed a document in which he promised to abjure cards for the rest of his life, if his conduct at Tranby Croft were kept absolutely secret. Such a He Is Dying In Hospital, and His document was regarded as criminating. It scemed an admission of his guilt.

Through Lady Brooke, Gordon-Cumming jearned some time later that the secret was out. Then he brought this suit for slander sulted in a most sen-alignal trial, a verdict as above and many revelations exceedingly unpleasant to the Prince of Wales and the people who look upon him as their coming King.
